Kauṭlya’s Maṇḍala theory, and it’s relevance in India-Pakistan relation and Sino-India relation

Manashi Ghosh

M.Phil 2nd Year, SSIS, JNU

Introduction

Kauṭlya’s Arthaśāstra recorded one of the most influential compendia on political philosophies and treatise in the Indian Subcontinent. Kauṭlya (370–283 BC) was a professor of Indian political tradition and economics at Taxila University, now in Pakistan. He was the chief advisor of the first Mauryan emperor Chandragupta, who was the king of the largest empire, the Indian subcontinent has ever witnessed. Kauṭlya wrote his famous work between 321-300 B.C.1 And a Sanskrit scholar, also a librarian at Mysore Oriental Library, Dr. R. Shamasastry discovered Kauṭlya’s Arthaśāstra within the piles of ancient Indian manuscripts in 1905. He published the manuscript of the Arthaśāstra in 1909.2 He also published the English translated version in 1915.3 In the introduction, he quoted Viṣṇupurāṇa IV, 24, and stated that the author of the treatise was a Brahmin scholar named Kauṭlya.4 Indian scholars usually acknowledge him as the father of Indian Political science. He wrote his masterpiece of treatise in a uniform style with logical analysis and constancy in the use of arithmetical calculation. Kauṭlya’s Arthaśāstra tells about how to administer the internal as well as external affairs of a state. He endorsed imperialism and advised the way to conquer another state. Kauṭlya was a well versed with foreign diplomacy he theorized the concept of interstate relationship and its implications in a very unprecedented way.5

In ancient India, the ultimate objectives of a state were to secure peace, to bring justice, and to provide security for its subject. As per चान्दोग्योपाणिषदः, a kingdom should be free from thieves and drunkards; and its subjects should be literate.6 The state, however, was responsible for the material well-being of the

---

4Arthaśāstra of Kauṭlya, N.P.Unni,(Part-1), New Bharatiya Corporation, Delhi, 2006, P- XXIII

नक्कद्यर्थदातासतिविभये नम्महपीत्वोत्तमः सन्नानाहितालः।
शतगुरु नाविद्याधिकारानुष्ठनः नवैशीर्यपदरायुगाः अतएवेतरिणकुतोद्वचाराणिनसंभवतीलोऽषं। (5/11/5), Chāndogyopaniṣad, Sankarshasya (Tr. hindi), Gita press Gorokhpur, 2072 smit., P.-502 citizen and was bound to promote moral values and ethics in society. Kauṭlya believed in expansionism, and he advised the king to conquer the territories of others to take care of the welfare of his state. A state, as a unit of the international system, cannot remain isolated from each other. George Modelski described the definition of foreign policy in his book “A Theory of foreign policy” as “the system of activities evolved by communities for changing the behavior of other states and for adjusting their own activities to the international environment.”

Foreign policy is well-thought-out to be a series of directives for a state to decision-making that would influence people, places, and things beyond the boundaries of the state. The primary goals of a foreign policy of a state are to strengthen national security and power, to advance the economy, to establish an international prestige, and to promote the welfare of its citizens.

The relevance of Kauṭlya’s diplomacy of foreign policy prevails through ages. The essence and the vast conglomeration of kingdoms that prospered in the Indian sub-continent during Mauryas give an example of exceptional diplomacy. During the Mauryas, the great power was centralized at the capital Pāṭaliputra, the largest city of the Indian subcontinent, around 300 B.C. Kauṭlya proposed the Maṇḍala theory, the theory of world conquest, to deal with foreign affairs of a state. In other words, it is a theory of world conquest. Kauṭlya advocated that the system of maintaining peace, waging war, and having healthy relationships with other states can be governed through the theory of Maṇḍala (circle of states). In Arthaśāstra, Kauṭlya advised the king to consider circle theory, six-fold theory, and four-fold theory as the basic principles to maintain inter-state relations with his neighboring states. We focus more on the circle theory about the relationship of India with foreign countries. Circle theory forms the basis of the foreign policy of a nation. This theory generally administers today’s diplomacy with some modifications. Before we deal with Kauṭlya’s circle theory of the state, we need to understand the concept of state in terms of the idea of Kauṭlya.

Kauṭlya’s concept of state

Kauṭlya identifies seven elements of sovereignty as the king, the council of the minister and high officer of the state, the territory inhabiting population of the state, the fortified cities, the country’s treasury, the state’s forces and army, and the allies. Kauṭlya identifies the ideal qualities and relative importance of each element of the state. The diagram below depicts the seven constituent elements of the state.

!Diagram of seven constituent elements of a state

Fig. 1. The constituent elements of a state as per Kauṭlya’s Arthaśāstra.

---

7 Ghosh. Peu, International relations, Phi learning private limited, Delhi, 2015, P-98
8 Russett, Bruce and Harvey Starr, World Politics: The menu for choice, W.H. Freeman and company, New work, 1996, P - 162
9 Ibid P - 98-99
10 Bronkhorst, Johannes, Candragupta Maurya and his importance for Indian history, Indological Taurinsia, VI-37, 2011.
11 खाम्यावलयनमपद्वशुकिमश्चाद्विप्रशन:मित्रायुः। (6.1.1), Kautiliyam Arthaśāstram, ManabenduBandyopadhyay, P-156
Scholars used different terms to describe the seven elements mentioned above. Kautilya’s sovereign state consists of seven limb-like constituents which are subordinate to the king. Shamaśastry used the seven elements with the word prakṛti and included an eighth element that is enemy. Kangle identified the Prakṛti as a constituent element of the state. The king is the essential element of the state. The enemy is an unfavorable element of the state that affects the sovereignty of the state. Kautilya warns the king to safeguard against calamities, which could weaken the seven elements. Kautilya’s concept of state element is analogous to the contemporary concept of national power.

Let us understand Kautiyan diplomacy through his theories of policies and strategic methods. Then, we will try to discuss the relevance of Kautilya’s diplomatic strategies in the current foreign policies of India.

Kautilya’s Maṇḍala theory of states

Maṇḍala is a Sanskrit word for circle. Kautilya stresses more on the territorial integrity of the state. Maṇḍala theory of foreign policy takes the geographical boundaries on its account. Kautilya classified the relationship between the wise king and the other states as those are enemies, a friend of Vijigishu, a friend of the enemy, a friend of the enemy’s friend, and a friend of the enemy’s friend. Towards the geographical rear of the conqueror are the rearward enemy, rearward friend, a friend of the enemy in the rear, and friend of the friend in the rear. The middle king and the neutral king complete this circle of the state.

1. Vijigisha: The aspirant who wants to conquer for more power. The conquer king is the most crucial factor in the circle theory. The king, who is the abode of sound policy, is the would-be conqueror.

2. Mitra (The friend): The territory of an ally of vijigishu that lies past to the territory of the enemy, the ally is considered as mitra. Kautilya has described three types of allies, i.e., a natural ally, an ally by birth, the made ally.

3. Ari (The enemy): The one who lies somewhere in the periphery of the region of the aspirant. The conquering king (vijigishu) and the enemy (ari) have a common boundary.

Kautilya has described three kinds of enemies. They are as follow:

i. Prakṛti Ari: The immediate enemy of the conquering king is known as a natural enemy.

ii. Sahaja Ari: The king, who is the same family or equality of high birth as conquering king, is an enemy by birth. This type of enemy is called Sahaja Ari.

iii. Krtrima Ari:

---

12 KautilyaAArthaśāstra, R. Shamaśastry, part II, P-511
13 Kumar, Abhishek, TheArthaśāstra: Assessing the contemporary relevance of an ancient Indian treaties on statecraft, U.S Army Command and General Staff College, 2006. P-25
14 Ibid, Page- 26
15 KautilyaArthaśāstra , Manabendu Bandyopadhyay, 6/1/3-5
16 RajajeevAryan PrakṛtīyaSaṁsthānaSaṁśāraHasthānāvibhikṣaṇa : (6.2.8) KautilyaArthaśāstra, R. Shamaśastry, P-516
17 TathāvādayuṣyānātaraśāmśāniPrakṛtireṇī : (6.2.2), KautilyamArthaśāstram, ManabenduBandyopadhyay, P-168
18 KumārīyaPrakṛtireṇī, R. Shamaśastry, P-517
19 SaṁsthānīSaṁsthānīPrakṛtireṇīKauṭylayārthaśāstrādṛṣṭi : (6.2.8), KautilyaArthaśāstra, R. Shamaśastry, P-516
20 Bhūmaṇārthaśāstra, R. Shamaśastry, P-517
21 SamaṇaSaṁsthānaSaṁsthānaPrakṛtireṇī, R. Shamaśastry, P-516
22 Bhūmaṇārthaśāstra: PrakṛtireṇīKauṭylayārthaśāstrādṛṣṭi : (6.2.11), KautilyaArthaśāstra, R. Shamaśastry, P-517
4. Arimitra: The ally of an enemy is arimitra. \(^{21}\)
5. Mitra-Mitra: It is an ally rear to arimitra. \(^{22}\)
6. Ari Mitra-Mitra: It is an ally of the enemy’s ally situated at immediate beyond Mitra –Mitra. \(^{23}\)
7. Pārṣṇigrāha: The enemy, in the rear of the Vijigishu. Heal catcher when Vijigishu would be on the expedition in front. \(^{24}\)
8. Ākranda: Vijigishu’s ally in the rear behind that of Parshnigraha. \(^{25}\)
9. Pārṣṇigrāhāsāra: enemy’s ally, The ally of Parshnigraha behind Ākranda. \(^{26}\)
10. Ākrandāsāra: The ally of Ākranda behind Parshnigrahasara, ultimately an ally. \(^{27}\)
11. Madhyama: the Middle king with territory adjoining those of Vijigishu and Ari and stronger than both. \(^{28}\)
12. Udāsīna: The kingdom that lies outside or stays neutral and more potent than that of Vijigishu, Ari, and Madhyama. \(^{29}\)

---

\(^{21}\) "स्मास्मिन्निर्मित्रितामि आरिमित्रितो भूतो भृत्तानि". \(^{22}\) Ibid, P-165
\(^{23}\) Ibid, P-165
\(^{24}\) Ibid, P-165
\(^{25}\) Ibid, P-165
\(^{26}\) Ibid, P-165
\(^{27}\) Ibid, P-165
\(^{28}\) Ibid, P-165
\(^{29}\) Ibid, P-165

---

(6/2/4), Kautiya Arthaśāstra, vol-II, Page no-169
In this circle of twelve kings, the conquering king is in the center point of this circle. To enlarge his kingdom and dominion, Kauṭlya advised the conquering king to take the help of a six-fold policy. By using this policy, he can make himself more powerful.

Every king has a circle of allies. There are four circles in mandala theory. The conquering king and his enemy, the middle king, and all independent actors who are the neutral king. The prakiti is the conquering king and his friend and the friends of a friend. They make eighteen circles collaborating with the council, territory, fort, treasury, and the army. As an example: conquering king, his ministry, territory, fort, treasury, and the army are six in the count; the friend of the conquering king, his ministry, territory, etc. are also six, the friend of friends of the conquer king also has six elements. Thus, there are a total of eighteen circles in the mandala theory.

Here, in this way, he has described four Raja Manḍal very shortly. Four primary circles of the states, twelve types of kings, six-ty elements of sovereignty, and in short, all of them together constitute seventy-two. The total number of pure Raja prakriti is twelve. This Raja prakriti called rayaprapkiti, when the council, territory, and other elements would be added with twelve Rajaprapkiti. So, the total is \((12 + (12 \times 5)) = 72.\)

1. Vijigīṣu Maṇḍala: Vijigīṣumāṇḍala has Mitra, Mitramitra, and their five elements. Thus the total number is eighteen.
2. Ari Maṇḍala: As same as vijigīṣu Maṇḍala, here also has mitra, mitramitra, and their five elements and the total number is eighteen.
3. Madhyam Maṇḍala: It also has five elements. The total number is eighteen.
4. Udāśina Maṇḍala: Mitra, mitramitra, and their five elements also belong to this circle. The total numbers of elements are eighteen.

The Maṇḍala theory is primarily concerned with foreign policy and security. The basic needs of a state are to make good relationships with numerous other states, with the presence of a wise ambitious conqueror king, who is anxious to establish his supremacy power over them. Benoy Kumar Sarkar wrote in this article that, “the doctrine of maṇḍala, underlying as it does the Hindu idea of the ‘Balance of Power,’ pervades the entire speculation on the subject of international relations.”

Three śakti

Kauṭṭlya has described three types of power as follow:

1. Utsāhaśakti: This power is the personal energy and drive of the rule himself.
2. Prabhuśakti: Power of treasury and the active army. A king can protect his state by using the treasury and military.
3. Mantraśakti: It refers to the power of intellectual. A king can maintain his power and dominance among other states with assistance intellectual and wise counsel of ministers and other administrative officers since they can create a robust foreign policy and good diplomacy.

A king can achieve what he aspires for by optimum use of these three sakti. Kauṭṭlya also advocates for weaker king how to defend himself. The strategies that a king can use to establish him as a prestigious king are as follow:

1. Sandhi: The kings pursue to come at a specific agreement without using belligerent means. These Sandhis could be transitory or long-lasting. The statements across the globe have applied the various types of sandhi mentioned in Arthashastra. For example, Bismarck had maintained Karmasandhi with Austria, and now Britain has signed Anavasitasandhi with America to collaborate for mutual assistance of military strategies.

2. Vigraha: The hostile situation created by a king to another state is called vigraha. Kauṭṭlya advised the king to create hostile circumstances for the states having equal power or relatively lower power to gain territory.
3. Asana: Showing reluctant behavior in a war against another state is termed as asana. This strategy works well when two states are equal in power.\(^{40}\)

4. Dvaidhibhava: It refers to dual policy, advised to the kings who have an active military. Henry Kissinger, the former US secretary of state, formed an alliance with China so that Russia and China remain apart in ties from each other. Kautilya’s concept of this kind of strategy is mentioned in his Maṇḍala theory.\(^{41}\)

5. Samsarya: The policy of seeking protection from a superior king is called samsarya. Kautilya advocates that this strategy should be applied to defend against the potential enemy by seeking protection from an ally. Weak nations of Africa and Asia started to take shelter from European powers as per this policy, which led to colonization.\(^{42}\)

6. Yaana: The straight expression of vigraha refers to yaana. The conquering king should crush his enemy by marching and strengthen his army and the fort.\(^{43}\)

India’s circle of state

Within India’s hypothetical circle of state, Pakistan is positioned as India’s primary enemy, Russia is the middle state and US as the powerful neutral state. In terms of allies, Japan stands out as India’s rearward ally. On the other hand, Indian shares strong bonds with Afghanistan. Since China acts as India’s rearward enemy, therefore it lies in Pakistan’s circle of allies.

The role of the US and Russia has always been significant in balancing power in South Asia. Before 2001, if the US was tilted more towards Pakistan, Russia was in India’s favor, thus maintaining the balance of power. India, as a rising powerful economic state, could use her development strategy as a foreign policy tool and could align the significant power in her favor. Indian should vehemently use this opportunity to arm-twist Pakistan to shun its state-sponsored terrorism against India.

The main issue that does not let India and Pakistan relationship get de-freeze is terrorism. PM Narendra Modi had explicitly propounded that talks and terrorism cannot go hand in hand. However, the case is clear that India cannot fight a conventional war. Pakistani establishment does not show any sign of budge on its support to their so-called “good terrorism,” which is nothing but state-sponsored terrorism against India. It is here that India should preempt the aggressive behavior of the Pakistani establishment by using offensive diplomatic warfare and concealed warfare to force the Pakistani establishment to accept peace. In the current economic and geopolitical environment, India should counter Pakistan diplomatically while simultaneously launching a covert cyber warfare campaign. Indian must use the highly negative sentiments against terrorism all over the world as a converging point of global powers and could form a broader coalition against Pakistan. India could incite dissension in the Pakistani establishment by promoting democracy and defection against the ill.

\(^{40}\) Ibid, P-179
\(^{41}\) Ibid, P179
\(^{42}\) Ibid, P-179
\(^{43}\) Ibid, P-179
India has a humongous economic relationship with China. China has a lot of economic interests in India. With a big market, India has a significant advantage over Pakistan in this case. India should use this leverage over China to counter the all-weather nature of its Pakistan relationship.

To deal with its belligerent neighbor which is a nuclear power and which uses terrorism as foreign policy tool, India needs to adopt Kauṭlya’s advice and adopt a proactive policy to deter Pakistan from the path of terrorism using the four stratagems of conciliation, offering gifts (asymmetric economic loss or benefits) causing dissensions and application of force. With limited scope for application of force or confrontation between two nuclear powers, India must use her newfound diplomatic and economic strength and the flux in the world order to her advantage. Kauṭlya’s Māṇḍala theory of foreign policies and interstate relationships could be one way to do the same.

India’s circle theory

A political scholar, Querine Hanlon, says that states are classified into three categories, such as weak, failing, and failed. Hanlon quoted that half of the globe lingers in the fragile category in the current stage, which drives the states to volatility, conflict, and war, which furtherbreeds the environment for terrorism, militias, and crime in the 21st century. The political theorist Max Weber stated that a successful state is the one that upholds complete control on the legitimate use of physical force within its territorial boundaries, and if the state lost its control due to unstable internal affairs and terrorism, then it is a failed state. Fragile States Index, developed by a non-governmental organization called Fund for Peace, helps to estimate the level of state failure in establishing and sustaining a democracy through the four-fold ranking system, tables, and color-coded map. We need to understand the contemporary security environment by applying Kauṭhya theories.

---

Indo-Pak relation through the lenses of Kauṭhya’s Arthaśāstra

In August 1947, Britishers left former India and partitioned it into an Islamic state, Pakistan, and a secular state, India. Hari Singh, Maharaja of Kashmir, sensed the threat of Pakistani invasion through tribal militia, which happened in October 1947; and thus, Kashmir acceded to India after Maharaja of Kashmir state signed an Instrument of Accession, which led to the first Kashmir War (War of 1947-1948 between India and Pakistan). However, Kauṭhya’s Mandala theory of states affirms that the neighboring state is a natural enemy. This instrument of accession can be termed as samsaryas per the Kauṭhya’s idea of diplomacy. On 1st January 1949, India and Pakistan agreed on a formal ceasefire, which created a Pakistan occupied Kashmir (PoK) region. The Indian Army could not march ahead due to the hostile climate of the PoK zone, and the guerrilla warfare of Pakistan prevented the further march of the Indian Army from taking further actions. Kauṭhya suggested that a state should not march into a hostile or ungovernable territory, and the state should agree on Bhumisandhi and Vyasana.

Kauṭhya advocated that the weaker state should align with a superior state to strengthen its power. Pakistan established a bilateral relationship with the superior power, the USA, in October 1947. Moreover, the USA provided financial and military assistance to Pakistan. The US-sponsored military alliance with Pakistan, such as the SEATO (1954), the Baghdad Pact (1955-58), and CENTO (1958-79), were some significant factors that troubled India in the past. The US-backed Pakistan became the exporter of terrorism in India. Pakistan began to tie with China after the Indo-China War of 1962, which derailed the Indo-China relationship. The Kashmir Issue is the primary irritant that embitters the relationship between the two.

In 1985, both countries pledged not to attack each other’s nuclear installations. The Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi visited Islamabad and signed three agreements about restraining themselves from attacking nuclear installations and facilities in 1988 after the restoration of democracy in Pakistan. The Pakistani terrorists hijacked an Indian aircraft and took it to Kandahar in 1999, and demanded to free three Pakistani terrorists in the exchange of the passengers and the crew aboard the aircraft. Pakistani terrorists attacked the Indian Parliament in December 2001. Again in 2006, Pakistani terrorists bombed a train in Mumbai, that killed 207 people, and injured around 700 people. The 26/12 terror attacks in Mumbai, the Pathankot attack, and the Pune blasts are the few terrorists’ attacks linked to Pakistani Intelligence, ISI. The relationship between the two countries worsened after the demolition of Babri Masjid on December 7, 1992. India did its successful nuclear test in May 1998, and Pakistan followed afterward in the same month. The period from 1999 to 2002 witnessed a high degree of restlessness and tension between these

---

45 Ghosh. Peu, International relations, Phi learning private limited, Delhi, 2015. P-
46 https://mea.gov.in/Speeches-Statements.htm?dtl/5469/Prime+Minister+Shri+Atal+Bihari+
47 IN THE HIGH COURT OF DELHI Criminal Appeal No. 811 of 2007,
(file://C:/Users/toshiba/Downloads/Mohd.%20Afzal%20Kumhar%20and%20Anr.%20v.%20State%20-%20Decision%20of%2013.04.09.pdf)
48 www.parliamentlibrary.com (http://164.100.47.193/Ebooks/Writereaddate/49_2017.pdf)
49 https://www.thehindu.com/news
50 www.timesofindia.com
two countries.\textsuperscript{51} The relationship between the two countries worsened to a great extent after the 26/11 Mumbai terror attacks, 2008. Even after that, Dr. Manmohan Singh, the Indian Prime Minister, met Pakistan’s Prime Minister Yousuf Raza Gilani during the 15\textsuperscript{th} NAM summit, 2009, and both strove to make serious efforts towards improvement in Indo–Pak relations despite several glitches.

Modi, the Prime Minister of India, invited his contemporary counterpart, Nawaz Sharif, from Pakistan to start afresh, and the heads of other South Asian countries for his swearing ceremony on May 26, 2014. On May 23, 2014, a terrorist group, linked to Pakistan, attacked the Indian consulate in Herat province of Afganistan. The Prime Minister of India did not cancel a meeting with Pakistan’s Prime Minister a day after the attack. This posture of the Indian Prime Minister displays a diplomatic maturity. A deliberate terrorist attack on India usually precedes a summit meeting between India and Pakistan, which impedes the dialogue between the two countries and create a mood of bellicose jingoism within the two. The establishment of peace and continuation of dialogue would deal a strong blow to the terrorists. India should pressurize Pakistan to deal hard on the terror groups lying within Pakistan’s boundaries using International Forums through its foreign diplomacy.

Seventy-two years after independence, the people on both sides of the border want to establish a sense of permanent peace and healthy relationship for both countries. We need a fresh approach to avoid conflict and confrontation as soon as possible. Our policies should be more focused on the creation of employment and opportunities to deal with modern-day problems as the vast majority in the South Asian regions are facing financial hardship and mental peace. The fresh start will open the door to trade, travel, and prosperity.

Indo-China relationship through the lenses of Kauṭṭya’s Arthaśāstra

The Indo-China conflict of 1962 resolved through a ceasefire in Arunanchal; the Chinese Army retreated due to the unwelcoming attitude of the people of Arunachal Pradesh. This matter can also be looked like the approach of Bhomiśandhi by China since the area was ungovernable.\textsuperscript{52} India should deter and prevent conflict by offering peace to an aggressive state or by allying with a superior power as per the Kauṭṭyan doctrine. The US, being the only superpower, limits India’s choices for bandwagoning. In this case, India, as a weaker conquer, can adopt Kauṭṭya’s advice and adopt a proactive policy to delay or deter the US from entering into a conflict with India using the four instruments of ploy such as appeasement, offering gifts (irregular economic welfares), instigating dissension, and application of force. China has maintained excellent relationships with the countries in India’s entire neighborhood. To counter the Chinese influence in the neighborhood, India must look at the neighborhood and try to maintain stronger relationships by providing economic welfare and cultural exchange. Since Modi came to power, he is continuously putting efforts to boost the partnership with the USA through Logistics Exchange Memorandum of Agreement (LEMOA) and that with Japan, a natural ally with aligned interests. Since the US is also interested in checking China’s advancement. Kauṭṭya refers to such diplomatic maneuvers as mantrayudha, i.e., war by counsel.\textsuperscript{53}

India should act as a vijigisu and should maneuver the dual policy (Dvaidebhava) to counter the Chinese threat. Adopting the policy of vigraha\textsubscript{i} in the case of China is not a plausible option; instead, India should endorse the Belt and Road Initiative of the Chinese Government. India should offer China a membership for SAARC while strengthening its regional cooperation with other neighbors such as Bangladesh–China–

\textsuperscript{52} Singh, Pavenjits, International relations, McGraw Hill private limitiation, Chennai, 2018, P-126

India–Myanmar Economic Corridor (BCIM-EC), and the Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation (BIMSTEC). India should not disregard the agreements and projects with its stronger allies, such as the USA, Japan, and Australia, because they would play a key role in countering the enforcement of Chinese supremacy in South Asia. Thus India can maintain the equilibrium of the power dynamics in South Asia through the methodological approach of the dual policy of cooperating with both enemy and allies simultaneously, and its pluralistic approach can establish a new normal of international relations.

Conclusion:

Kauṭlya’s Maṇḍala theory of foreign policies and interstate relationships holds relevance in the modern world though it can not be applied in every aspect of the current scenario. However, most of his concept stands as the idea of constant marching to gain power and territory. Thus, it frays the notion of integrity. But the Kauṭlya diplomacy for dealing with the internal and the external affairs of the state dominates in regional and international relations. His warfare techniques, even in the present day, help a lot to gain power and supremacy among the countries of the world. We can trace its relevance in foreign policies of the US and China. This article explains the concept of state and its constituent elements. The article focuses on the relevance of Maṇḍala theory and the foreign diplomacy of Kauṭlya in the modern era. India’s relationship with its natural enemy, Pakistan, and the neighbor, China, has been well demonstrated through the instrument of the Kauṭlya diplomacy and his Maṇḍala theory of states.

Bibliography

11. Bronkhorst, Johannes, Candragupta Maurya and his importance for Indian history, Indological Taurinsia, VI-37, 2011

---

Internet source

1. www.parlimentlibrary.com
2. www.thehindu.com
3. www.timesofindia.com
4. https://mea.gov.in
5. https://thediplomat.com